The Garden Bug

Songbirds in winter

Missing your wild feathered friends? If you stand near some trees and make soft "psh-psh-psh" sounds, this is bird parlance for "a predator is near," and even in winter, some birds may pop by to investigate! They may also make a few short "call notes" of their own to help warn of danger. Your best ally in this trick is the black-capped chickadee, often the first to respond. They can vary the rate or urgency of their calls to convey the distance or the immediacy of the threat. - Brenda Weaver
