Planting Shasta daisies

Daisies love full-sun locations. They need fertile soil, but not too rich, or there will be more vegetation than flowers. The soil should also drain very well, as Shastas don't like soggy soil; in fact, they can tolerate drought conditions to some degree. Space each plant about 1-2 feet apart. Dwarf varieties won't need much protection from the wind, but the taller types likely will, and possibly support stakes also. Divide plants at the roots when they grow too thickly together. - Brenda Weaver
